WHAT LETS YOU BRING COUNTLESS FLAVORS TO LIFE?

ALMONDS, OF COURSE.

These days as snack-happy consumers reach for almonds in record numbers, they’re craving more flavorful ways to enjoy them, too. By adding your spicy touch to their tasty, crunchy, heart-healthy nutrition, almonds can be indispensable to your next snack-aisle success. Learn more about the essential almond at Almonds.com/snacking.

Scientific evidence suggests, but does not prove, that eating 1.5 ounces per day of most nuts, such as almonds, as part of a diet low in saturated fat and cholesterol may reduce the risk of heart disease. One serving of almonds (28g) has 13g of unsaturated fat and only 1g of saturated fat.

By CanolaInfo

As a food professional, you probably know canola oil is healthy and versatile, but perhaps not exactly why.

Canola oil is lauded for both what it does contain and what it doesn’t. Of all common cooking oils, it has the most plant-based omega-3 fat (11 percent) and the least saturated fat (7 percent) — half that of olive oil (15 percent). Canola oil is also free of trans fat, which the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) preliminarily ruled unsafe in 2013.

Heart-Smart Fat

“Since heart disease is the leading cause of death in the United States, it’s critical to keep intake of saturated fat to 6-10 percent of total daily calories, depending on one’s risk of heart disease, and to consume a moderate amount of healthy unsaturated fats instead,” says Dr. Suzanne Steinbaum, cardiologist and director of the women’s heart disease center at New York’s Lenox Hill Hospital. “Canola oil is simply a smart choice as an everyday cooking oil.”

In fact, the FDA authorized a qualified health claim* on canola oil’s ability to reduce the risk of heart disease when used in place of saturated fat. Research has shown that the oil’s high unsaturated fat content (93 percent) helps lower L.D. cholesterol, thereby reducing the risk of cardiovascular disease. The unsaturated fats are made up of monounsaturated fat (61 percent) and polyunsaturated fats (32 percent). The latter category is comprised of alpha-linolenic acid, an omega-3 fat, and linoleic acid, an omega-6 fat.

“The types of omega-3 and omega-6 fats that are found in canola oil can be considered ‘essential’ in the diet because the body can’t make them on its own,” notes Roberta Duyff, M.S., R.D.N., author of the American Dietetic Association Complete Food and Nutrition Guide. “Canola oil is higher in the omega-3 alpha-linolenic acid than other common cooking oils so it’s an easy way to get some of this often underconsumed fat in the diet.”

A Plant All Its Own

Canola oil comes from the crushed seeds of the canola plant, which a member of the Brassica family that includes broccoli, cabbage and cauliflower. It was developed in Canada through traditional plant breeding to remove two undesirable components (erucic acid and glucosinolates) found in rapeseed. To acknowledge these differences, the new plant earned a new name, canola — a contraction of “Canadian” and “oil” meaning “oil.”

“Canola is often confused with rapeseed, but the two crops and their oils are distinctly different,” says Minnesota canola grower Rob Rynning.

Indeed, there is an internationally regulated definition of canola that differentiates it from rapeseed based upon it having less than 2 percent erucic acid and less than 30 micromoles of glucosinolates (a bitter-tasting organic compound). Oilseeds that do not meet this standard cannot use the term “canola.”

Rapeseed, although still grown in limited quantities in North America, is now confined to production under contract for specific industrial uses, Rynning notes.

Go-to Ingredient

Moreover, chefs consider canola oil a kitchen essential, too. Its neutral flavor, light texture and high heat tolerance (smoke point of 468 °F) make it a match for almost any culinary application.

“I love cooking with canola oil because it’s incredibly versatile,” agrees Nancy Hughes, a professional recipe developer and cookbook author. “I can use it for sautéing, sautéing, roasting, baking, stir-frying, vinaigrettes — you name it. The fact that it’s healthy to boot makes my decision in the kitchen even easier.”

Limited and not conclusive scientific evidence suggests that eating about ½ tablespoon (13 grams) of canola oil daily may reduce the risk of coronary heart disease due to the unsaturated fat content in canola oil. To achieve this possible benefit, canola oil is to replace a similar amount of saturated fat and not increase the total number of calories you eat in a day.

Rivland rice flours...

None better under the sun!

A solid reputation for superior quality, consistent supply, friendly customer service, experienced technical support and a comprehensive product safety program has earned us the first name in rice flour.

At Rivland, our neighbors grow the rice and our friends transport it from the fields to our mill. We all take personal pride in ensuring the quality and safety of our rice flour from the field to you. That’s why we know there’s none better under the sun!
